A good will is one that acts from duty in accordance with the universal moral law. During his own life, there was much critical attention paid to his thought. The state is constituted by laws which are necessary a priori because they flow from the very concept of law. Kant's summary 607. It received few reviews, and these granted it no significance. The latter are not concepts, [69] but are forms of sensibility that are a priori necessary conditions for any possible experience.
