In the Time of the Nations. However, instead of adumbrating revelatory moods, Levinas has recourse to bodily states like fatigue, indolence, and insomnia, in which the gap between self and I is clearest.

Levinas, Blanchot, Bataille and Communication. How could transcendence be factual? In pleasure as in pain, we need—not out of lack—but in desire or in hope. London and New York, NY: Levocabulaire de Levinas. He will therefore concentrate on what it means for a human being to posit itself in an act that is not already abstracted from its everyday life. This failure of the will is experienced in the face-to-face encounter.
