This book is haunting, horrifying, and next-to-impossible to put. The entire story is hard and I felt such an emotional connection to the stories of these women, their victimization in Communist All Woman and Springtime Korea and Capitalist South Korea and the United States. He writes every day, when he is not teaching himself to play the cello, sculpting, working on one of his countless crazy inventions or tending the land in his care.

It is difficult to believe this type of activity goes on. These six and there is in. Instead, he used it to propel himself forward, to make himself stronger. But in the last piece of the book something upsetting happened...the author gave the story a redemptive turn.

Instead they, along with another young woman, Cho, are sold as sex slaves to a S. Blue Notebook is definitely more touching than this one. The flight to South Korea, however, in relation to the ordeal of their daily life, is a little too easy and rather anticlimactic.
