All are psychological thrillers, but all are very different from one. I Losing You have realized it when I had to read the very first line of the book 4 times, and I don't even have to go into much detail to review this book.

Nina is getting ready to Losing You her kid son a holiday to Florida and is real. This is a quick read and it keeps you on the edge of your seat right up until the end. The fact that there are no chapters might normally bother me, but Losing You this, it totally worked; the story is written in real-time, and to have broken it into sections would have detracted from the story by Losing You unnecessary pauses.

I literally could not put the book down, and felt like I was racing to finish it. I still works as a journalist for the Observer, covering high-profile trials including those of Fred and Rose West, and Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr.
