Even in the present age, when the advantages of education are more general than in apostolic times, this would be a task not one in a thousand among Christians could perform. The main subjects of these sweet songs were the glorious things of the Gospel; for whereas before, for many ages, there was but here and there a prophecy of Christ in many ages, but here he is spoken of by David, His ancestor, abundantly, in multitudes of songs, speaking of His incarnation, life, death, resurrection, ascension into heaven, His satisfaction and intercession, His prophetic, kingly and priestly office, and His glorious benefits in this life, and that which is to come. Eusebius, Psalmody Level 1 (School of Worship) Psalm xxxiii:
Why, the hymns of Divine prescription have been practically set aside. The la
That the Doctrine, Government and Worship of the Church have been divinely authorized, appointed and prescribed; and that nothing is to be used in the formal worship of God which He has not appointed. Equally unreasonable would it be to suppose that the apostolic directions, with regard to singing psalms, could be understood by the primitive Christians, as authorizing them to prepare psalms to be used in the worship of God, instead of those which He Himself had provided in His Word. Who is sufficient for these things? Has God provided or furnished such a book, or has he left each church or each age of the church to furnish one for itself?
