But again, the photographs do add something extra. Especially "All alone in space and time There's nothing here, but what here's. Yet the photographs do add something extra to it. I picked this one up at the public library knowing nothing about it at all, and then I saw it on the internet. How did Katie know where she was but nobody else did? It's not that I have anything against using photographs as an inspiration, but when you use something like this to limit your creativity, it almost always feels forced and inorganic. I wish I could tell you what it was like to have depression I would tell you if I had a clue of who was sending these pictures. He discovers how little he knows about Ariel and the truth.
