This means that educators must take time to get to know all students so that they can spend time cultivating talents and build on their potential. We present the case of Brockton High School, the largest school in America's highest performing state Massachusetts and show how they moved from being among the worst schools to one of the best.

The mythology that must be challenged is that we can afford to take care of our
We will also show that students can be part of this process, and spaces can be provided so that they can tell us what they need to be successful. Bacon, chronicles the experiences of Superintendent Amy Sichel, who was running a school district that was widely regarded as successful, but when faced with the data that clearly showed low-income students and students of color were doing poorly, she and her team used that information to catalyze the school community to go from good to great.

It is also a central feature of educational policy in some nations. It does so made sure the teaching programme was structured so all children had maximum opportunity to learn and achieve success.
